MANSFIELD -- Richland County Commissioners passed a resolution Thursday to intervene in the proposed wind farm to be built on acreage on the Richland-Crawford County line.

Commissioner Tim Wert said commissioners are taking this action to protect the roads. The resolution seeks assurances roads will be repaired by the wind farm company and not on the county's dime.

As many as 200 turbines are expected to be hauled in over a period of up to nine months.

Scott Hawken, Element Power senior project manager, could not immediately be reached for comment.

The starting date for the wind farm project is unknown.

Commissioners will forward the resolution to the Ohio Power Siting Board.

The Black Fork Wind project will encompass about 46,000 acres in Richland County and portions of Sandusky Township in Crawford County.

Hawken said previously a viable timeline shows construction beginning early in 2012, with power generation possible by the end of that year.

"We are fairly well along. We're excited to be here -- bringing renewable energy to the heart of Ohio with a $300 million project," Hawken said.
